Comments: I'm objecting to the new elevated freeway which has recently been added to the design of the Western Distributor. Apart from bringing - reportedly - more than 10,000 more trucks and cars to the area, this freeway features no sound barriers and will pass within 100m of houses, many of which are elevated. Why can't there be some local consultation about the freeway running at railway cutting level, rather than an elevated height? Surely Melbourne Council would rather do this, and support the proposed E-Gate concept, linking Docklands and West Melbourne via a green park, than ensure Docklands remains inaccessible forever and that the atmosphere and livability of West Melbourne is ruined, just as the area is becoming more populated.
