Why is it significant?

17 Coronet Grove is an intact, highly representative example of mid-century modern residential architecture with some elements of the Post-War Melbourne Regional Style. The house retains its original and early elements associated with the characteristics of mid-century Modernism. Additions to the house carried out in the decade after its construction, to accommodate an expanding household and recreational pursuits, are highly representative of the mid-century era, and reflect a continuing interest in the Modernist architectural idiom. Its key design elements that are representative of this period and style include: its extensive window wall system oriented towards the north; its simple form with horizontal massing and an unbroken roofline; exposed structural elements; use of contrasting materials and texture; the integration of the house within on the site's topography and the paved, terraced landscaping. Its architectural emphasis on privacy and inward facing planning are archetypical of suburban residential architecture from this period. (Criterion D)
